A Great Fizzle.

The grand Democratic rally at Lake Maranacolk, so freely advertised, seems to have been a grand fizzle. The Lewiston Journal places the attendance at three hundred and twenty-seven, while the associated gress is more liberal and estimates that there were "abou s.x hundred? present, or not enough to fill City Hall comportably. Of the great array of orators advertised for the occasion not one of them named seems to have been present except party were conspicuous only by their absence. Brown is the chairman of the party were conspicuous only by their absence. Brown is the chairman of the seems to have been present except respondent of the Democratic Posts. The Democratic party has a few rich men, but they cannot furnish all the "slnews" every year, had they have been peculiarly careful in opening help podkets this summer because of the composition of the State committee. The wan who trajicked du post offices is still at its head and commot be oussed thill January.

would be a corresponding disavastage to home abor and to the general prosperity of the country.

Full employment at fair wages of the entire labor of a country gives to it its greatest prosperity and adds most to national wealth. Legislation cannot fix directly the wages of labor. But it can by fostering industries, in the development of natural resources, give to home labor the supplying of the one market, and thus affect directly the price of labor engaged in such industries. Tariff legislation, is the only legislation that can benefit labor in its competition with the poorly paid labor of other countries. Strike from the laborers of this country must then stand unsided and alone, in their competition with that labor of the world where homeless poverty, is the sole inheritance of the sons of ton.

contested by the Bangors and also throwing the base ball, in which latter Burleigh, of the college team, took part.

The dash was won by Bay in 11½ seconds, with Dearth a good second and Rudderham third. Earle won the ball throwing, making a throw of one hundred yards, Burleigh coming next with ninety-six yards and five inches, Rudderham ninety yards and five inches and C. Burnsninety yards. The game of ball was not very exciting the Bangors making no effort to outplay their unorganized and out of practice competitors, and resulted in an easy victory for the former by a score of 12 to 5. We think a little more good work on both sides would have been more satisfactory to the antilence. It was, in point of fact, a sort of plenie for the boys, and they seemed to enjoy it, after their hard season's work.

Bangor has well taken care of the vast crowds, the hotels' ability at accommodation being supplemented by the turning of the steamboats into temporary taverns and many private dwelling houses into boarding and lodging places. Nobody went without a place to lay his head or a morsel of food for his atomach. All were cared for somehow, but the resources of the town were severely taxed. The Bangor House was the headquarters for the fair folks, and the managers were very assiduous in their attentions to guests. The head

A gentleman who arrived in Washington from Charleston gave a graphic account of his experience and sensations during the earthquake. He said:

"I had been conscious all the evening of a strange feeling of dread, of premonition of an impending catastrophe. There was a subtleinfluence in the air, a mysterous something that filled the mind wight and passion, dazzles by its inguite substituting that filled the mind wight and passion, dazzles by its light playaness on excites the deep remotions by its tenderness and pathos. No planist has ever so successfully worked upon the different feelings of his au litors. Whatever this mood, he compels one to feel withhim. seeling of spoin and nervous expectancy; But seeing no sapparend cause for giving way to this weak dread, I tried to throw it off, but could not. I went to my room, about ten o'clock to get ready to go to bed. Just as I wis about to undress there was a heavy trembling of the house. I stopped short in my preparations and stood in the middle of the shoot half paralyzed with fright. I realized that it was an earthquake and something seemed to warm my diagram and not yet come. Before I could move from my place the shock came with a horrible sound of cracking timbers an failing ceilings. The house rocked to and tro, throwing me off my feet. I picked myself up and found I was in utter dat mess, the light having gone out. The house was still trembling and the plaster falling and the air was filled with a choking dust. I have faced death many times in my life but never have I had such a experience as that was, groping in the darkness for the door that I could not said and the floor rolling and from the book with the building into a crushed, shapeless mass under the timbers.

"At last I reached the street. A strange silence ws; all around. The first crash of failing wr-ls was over and the people had not recovered their frightened wits. Through i blinding, stifling haze of mortar there shone the glare of the street lamps. Saddenly there was a scream and then all cound me I heard the cries of terror; th: grouns of anguish and pain and an indestribable uproar. Péople knelt down right in the middle of the streets and prayed albud to be sived. They swayed backward and forward with each sincessive shock; while kgicks; and tiles fell all around them. I knew that atidal wave usually followed an earthquake. So I selected a fall tree and, stood by it ready to climb it on the slightest warning. After a while, seeing that the danger of a tidal wave was past, I walked around the ruins. No, one felt like standing still at any place, and all night the streets were lined with people walking hither and it ther, some crying, some praying, others cursing, but all wearing the same air of nervous expectancy, like a person being hented down by a fele releatless and quiet that was likely to spring dipon him at any moment. At every frequent shock the people would stop and with bated breath and blanched fares anxiously await the passing of the quake, not knowing what moment the earth wind open and swallow them. In the middle of the street little fissures would open in the pavement from which issued small streams of boiling water and bluish mud. This would befollowed by an emission of a warm substance resembling helvy paint. It subsequently saw traces of the same phenomenon in the surrounding country, the fioles or springs in some places reing two feet in circumference.

"The darext day I spent in a fruitless endeavor fro get out of town. There were no traits, because there were no railroads. The very road beds were destroyed and in places the rails were twisted up. The day following the night of the quake wits in painful oue. As people began to realize the deflorable damage and the terrific force of the quake they became more alarined. I saw two f ours.

"At last I reached the street. A strange silence ws: all around. The first crash of failing we'ls was over and the people had not recovered their frightened wits."

We all sat up until it passed. There were three shocks that night. The next morn-ing 1 named that the railway track had been repaired and a train would go out: been repaired and a train would be said to a left the steamer and caught the train. All I anted was to get out of Charleston; no matter where. We made slow time over a bad road for nine miles when the train suddenly stopped. There was a no matter where the control of the c

From an illustrated paper in the Septem her Century, on the great planist; we quote as follows: "Whenever the Master vaved a pupil from the stool and took his place st the plane to illustrate a passage, a sudden hush fell on the assembly; the straggless whispering and laughing over in the corner stopped their chatter and olned the group of eager listeners, standing closely about the performer and con-realing him from view. Those were moments of hopeful expectancy. How hard ments of hopeful expectancy. How hard every one was wishing that he would play it all! Sometimes it would be only a few measures; again, a page or two; then he would stop, shruptly: A score of happy faces grew long with disappointment, though all were grateful for even these fragmentary delights; but when the Master desputed to perform an entire piece, the favor was regarded as a special act of Providence.
